BUSINESS CHALLENGE

The Professional Golfers' Association of America (PGA) is the world's largest working sports organization, leading a $65 billion-a-year industry that serves 1.5 million jobs. A decline in golf participation numbers led the PGA of America led to a learning and development blueprint that laid out an action plan for growth titled Golf 2.0.

The glaring challenge standing in the way of delivering a training initiative was a very real generational gap. The PGA needed to facilitate the development of expertise among veteran members and get them to share their institutional knowledge and experience with younger members.
